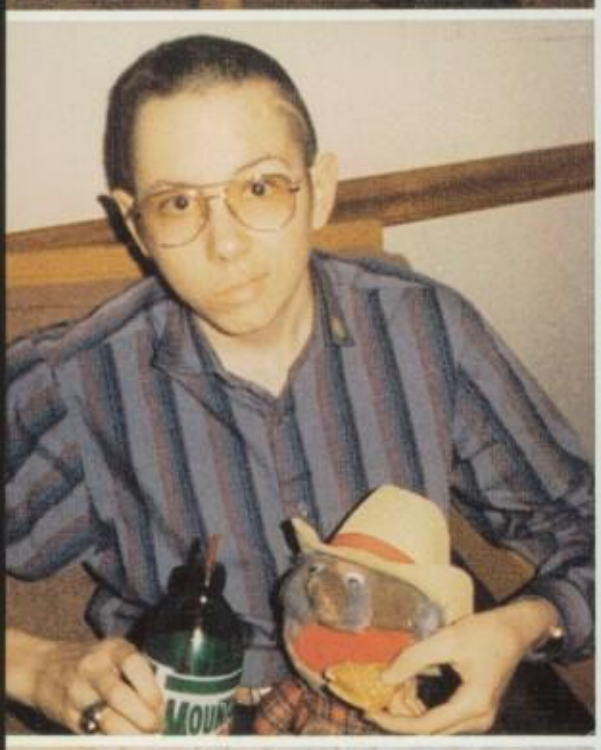
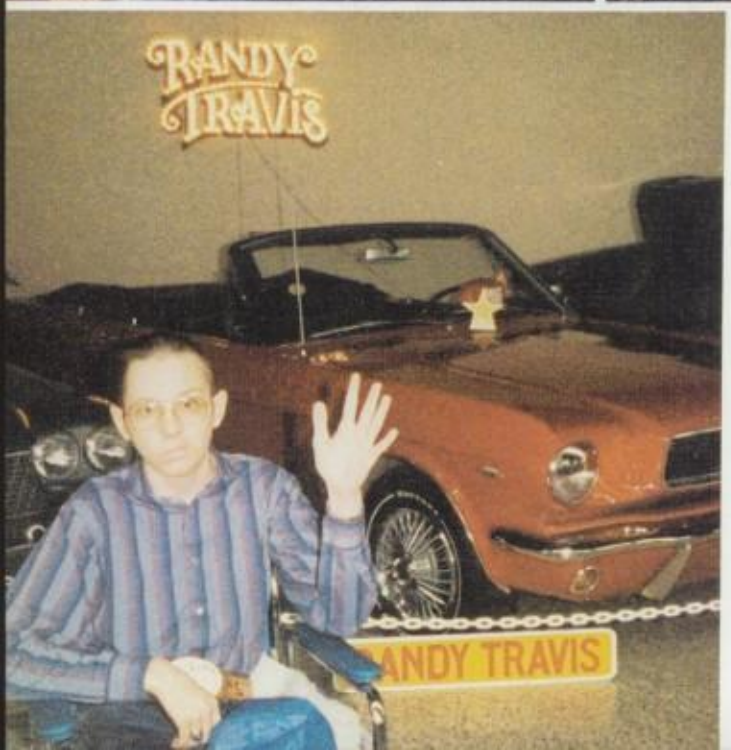
Born to be wild!





Don't feel sorry for me,please, I don't need your pity.
Whatever you say, don't say,"What if?'
I live for today and am very aware of what the future might hold.
Don't be at a loss, I am still human and very much alive.
I am a child with wants and needs,and yes,even dreams.
I may be sick,but don't treat me that way.
Treat me as though you love me,because I draw strength through your love and faith.
Encourage me with your smile,help me dream of tomorrows.
Give me something to hope for.
I need your hope,your faith,and love.
God is taking care of me,he also needs your help.
I sometimes get discouraged,give me a hug,and hope through your faith.
Believe with me,for brighter tomorrows.

PAW PRINTS STAFF

Behind the Scenes

Since Paw Prints is in its second year of publication we think it's time that our readers get to see behind the scenes.

Paw Prints was started last year by Miss Casey Kerr, who teaches Spanish and junior English. Miss Kerr felt that the public should know more about student activities and interests. She also felt that students should experience the hard work and dedication it takes to make worthy contributions to a functioning newspaper. Most importantly, however, Miss Kerr wanted students to experience the good feeling that comes from seeing one's own work published.

Miss Kerr made a set of guidelines for each position of the journalism staff. Each interested student filled out an application for his or her desired position. References from teachers were also required. The selections were then made based upon qualifications and number of personnel needed.

The first Monday of every month a meeting is held to assign projects to the division reporters and photographer. The deadline is then set and the staff members begin working on their assignments. The deadline is usually set at two weeks, after which all articles must be submitted to the managing editor for review and revision. After the editing process, the articles are given to the staff typist. Finally, the articles are resubmitted to the managing editor who then checks for clerical errors and makes any last minute changes.

The articles are accompanied by two different staff members each month to the Advocate. The members assist in the layout of the articles.

Although only in its second year of operation, Paw Prints is fast becoming a major journalistic achievement of Crestline high school.

No matter what business you're in, few things are as important as how you present yourself. In person, it's called personality. In print, it's signage. And how you sign your business ought to be as personal as how you sign your name.

We design sign systems in a variety of techniques, from sandblasting and screen printing to hand lettering and airbrushing, gold leaf to neon.

Before you let someone put your name on a sign that looks like everybody else's, consider a sign from the Tridico team.

Your name will have never looked so good!
